COMPO-BOARD.

Compo-Board is in many respects the most effective wall lining ever devised. It is made of narrow strips of thoroughly seasoned wood so cemented together under pressure that it has all of the cohesiveness of a single sheet, with the extra advantage that it cannot warp or give. It is then covered on both sides with a heavy building paper. It nails direct to the studs, comes in four-foot widths and a variety of lengths, can be cut to fit any space, is warmer in winter, cooler in summer, not more expensive than and twice as durable as lath and plaster. It takes paint, kalsomine, wall paper or any other finish desired, gives a smooth, clean surface that adds immeasurably to the attractiveness of the room in which it is applied, costs nothing for repairs once it is installed, and can be put on by any one with the slightest practical knowledge of the use of tools. A request to Howard Ketcham, Third Street and Girard Avenue, Philadelphia, who is the sole representative for the Nonwoven Compo-Board Company, will bring to persons interested a sample of Compo-Board with a booklet of descriptive literature illustrating the wide variety of uses to which it is adapted. Compo-Board has the immense advantage of having a lumber base; most boards of the kind are made of straw board and will rot.

TO IMPROVE PLOT AT LOGAN.

Wilson & Weller have taken title from Benjamin E. Block, of Norris, to a plot on the east side of Thirteenth street north of Wagner avenue, having a front of 254 feet by a depth of 84 feet. The plot of ground on the northwest side of Ogontz avenue and the southeast side of Mc Mary avenue, east of Germantown, 100 feet by 657 feet, will be developed immediately by an operation of dwellings. Conveyance of the ground has been made by Charles M. Rainsford to John Ennis, and by John Ennis to Charles M. Rainsford, subject to mortgages of $15,400.

Jury Awards Small Damage Verdict in Favor of B. and A. Messenger.

One of the cases tried this week in the Municipal court was that of Benjamin Messenger and Aaron Messenger vs. Randolph Mason, all of Moreland township, near Woodmont.

Joseph Forrester for the plaintiff, and Samuel H. High for the defense. This case is an action of trespass brought by the plaintiff against the defendant for party tearing down and removing the material in a 12-room dwelling. This was effected on the premises of the plaintiff in Moreland township. The defendants removed part of the building on August 11, 1911. He was then stopped. The plaintiffs produced their deed for the farm on which the building was erected. The plaintiffs also produced evidence to show that it would cost $160 for material and work to restore the building to its former condition.

The defendant said he had purchased the building from the tenants on the farm, who had lived there. These were Weinstein Brothers and Engelman. Two carpenters testified that it would take about 30 feet of lumber to restore the building and would take one carpenter from one to two days to restore it. The estimate of the cost of lumber and labor was $25.

B. Weinstein said he was one of the tenants on the farm from April, 1911, to April, 1912. He built the house, he said. The jury brought in a verdict of $25 damages in favor of the plaintiffs.

A MIDWINTER GRANGE PICNIC

Farmers Hold Novel Meeting—All Have a Fine Time.

A novel, interesting and unique entertainment was given by Cold Point Grange, on Wednesday, March 14th. The event being a midwinter picnic in its hall at Narcessa, Montgomery county, Pa. The affair was well under way when we arrived there about noon. Various table games were in progress; groups of people were engaged in animated conversation, and children were playing and romping about. About half past twelve o'clock the large number of visitors and members, nearly a hundred in all, were invited to partake of the splendid banquet that had been provided by the ladies of Cold Point. In the absence of the Master, Seth T. Walton, Master of the Pomona Grange, of Montgomery county, was invited to sit at the head of the table with E. B. Dorsett, the Lecturer of the Pennsylvania State Grange as the guest of honor at his right. After the chaplain, Stephen H. Lewry, a visitor from Pennsylvania, had invoked the Divine blessing, the group in hand was entered into with a hearty zest; and all did ample justice to the delicious viands spread in such profusion before them.

After the dinner was disposed of, the Master, Jonathan K. Kaley, having arrived in the meantime, called to order the afternoon meeting, which was to be a literary and musical one, with an address by the State Lecturer as the chief attraction. The call to order the meeting was turned over to the charge of the local lecturer, Mrs. Lila Walker Kaley, who opened the program with music by the Grange.

She then called for the address of welcome, which was given by the master in a neat speech in behalf of the members; Seth T. Walton made the response on behalf of the visitors from the neighboring Granges, of whom there was a number present. After a duet by two visiting ladies, the State lecturer was introduced, who gave three addresses on the origin, rise and worth of the Grange up to the present time. It has ever been our privilege to hear it was well received and highly appreciated by all present. Another duet and a dialogue by two members of the Grange, Cold Point, of other musical selections and recitations completed the program as arranged. When the lecturer of Cold Point deftly turned the meeting into a Farmers' Institute, as there was still a half hour before supper time, when various agricultural topics were called up and discussed as fully as the short time before adjournment permitted.

With the close of the meeting came the final meal; over which joyous feasts and health provoking sallies of wit were indulged in by the happy throng that had been together in such pleasant fashion for seven or eight hours.

This novel picnic was a great success, and will doubtless bring its promoters much profit, held so long in advance of the real picnic season, thereby being analogous to the saying that thunder storms early in the season, as in January and February, portend a fruitful and productive year.

From the picnic the state lecturer, Brother Dorsett, went to Mechanicsville, Bucks county, to organize the Buckingham Farmers' Club into a Grange. After bidding one another goodby the merry picnicers turned their faces homeward, with the feeling that a pleasant and highly profitable day had been spent together.

MAN KILLED BY JUMP FROM HIGH WINDOW

Bodily Frightened by Blaze in House He Flung Himself to Ground—Dwelling Near Wyncoffe Gutter by Midnight Fire—Firemen Hurt.

Fire after midnight last Saturday night gutted the home of James McGurn, a section foreman employed by the Reading Railroad Company. The house is a three-story frame structure, and is located on Electric avenue, Wyncoffe.

Thrilling rescues marked the blaze, which started about one o'clock, McGurn was awakened "crashing, cracking, noisily," and opening the bedroom door was confronted by fire which cut off escape by the stairway. He yelled to other members of the family, William Pickwell, a neighbor, who saw the fire, telephoned to the fire companies in Jermintown, Glenside, Edge Hill and Weldon. In the house at the time were McGurn and his wife, Miss Alice McGurn, Matthew McGurn, a son, Thomas Campion, nephew; Mrs. Katherine Fitzgerald, of Philadelphia, a sister of Mrs. McGurn; Patrick Donovan, a boarder, and Thomas Gunn, the Philadelphia, who only recently left a hospital and was recuperating at the McGurn home.

McGurn, a boarder, was ill and nervous, pitched headlong from a second-story window, and alighting on his head on the edge of a concrete walk. His skull was crushed and neck broken. He was hurried by automobile to the Jewish hospital, but was dead when he reached there.

Mrs. James McGurn, Alice McGurn and Patrick Donovan, a boarder, were in the house. They were obliged to take refuge on a porch roof and were later lowered to the ground. The men escaped the same way.

The loss is about $500. The origin of the fire is not known, but probably was due to a defective fuse.

In fighting the fire several firemen were slightly hurt, among them, Frank McKee of the Independent Company, and Howard Foster, of Glenside.

NEWTOWN

Miss Mather entertained the New Century Club on Wednesday.

Harbort council is considering making extensive street improvements.

H. C. Worstall has been confined to his bed by a severe attack of the grip.

J. V. Randall has been entertaining Israel Ewan, of Oakland, California. He went west from here 25 years ago.

Mr. Peter Russell and Michael McKee of the Independent Company, and Howard Foster, of Glenside.

The Jason Sexton Estate.

In the adjudication of the estate of Jason Sexton, of North Wales, former assemblyman, his widow did not abide by his will. He had bequeathed the executor half of the $1458 estate in trust for the benefit of his widow and one-half of his estate after $200 is paid to his grand-daughter, Grace Sexton. By declining to accept these provisions his widow received one-third of the personal estate absolutely and the income of one-third of the real estate for life.

Wisshickon grange will meet Thursday evening in Odd Fellows' hall, Springhouse.

Ten South Broad street lots beyond Lansdale borough limits have been purchased by Willard White, who will erect houses on them.

To verify his snake story, Andrew Smith brought along to the woods near Philadelphia, two of the largest black snakes ever seen in that section, which he had killed, one measuring five feet and the other four feet four inches.

A suberly in the western portion of Lansdale is likely to be started soon under the direction of Harry Richardson, who has a force of men laying out streets. Streets will be laid out and everything done to make the place an inviting one for home-seekers.

During the past week the turnpike between Daviesville and Southampton has been in a very bad condition. At many places deep quicksands are in the roadbed.

One method of financing the fire company building is suggested and that is the issuing of first mortgage certificates. These to be disposed to residents in this vicinity at $100 each. Each certificate bearing interest. The value of the building plus the lot would be the assets back of the certificates, and the risk of loss in any case is very small.

Committee on purchase of lot held a meeting on Tuesday at the home of Mr. Meyer and reported that four lots had been offered for the fire company building. Only two were favorably considered and the committee will endeavor to get a lower option on these lots and hold another meeting, after which the president will be asked to hold a special meeting of the fire company and a vote taken on which option to accept.

Another banner audience witnessed the sixth performance of the fire company's drama, "Jim Burley's Ranch," and $43 was cleared at Somerset on last Saturday night. On March 23rd, the play will be given at Ivyland and on Monday, March 25th, at Richboro. It is hoped to give the play at Fox Chase after Lent, as the many praises that have been showered on members of the production have reached the ears of Fox Chase people and the opera house has been offered free of charge. This building will hold 1000 people and many residents in this vicinity will be glad to take in the show again, under favorable stage conditions. The fund towards a lot has now reached the sum of $270.

They were not met at the invitation of the railroad company officials. They received poor consideration and were not to secure any promises of better service. A SINGULAR VEHICLE

By ELINOR STEWART CATON

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

A seedy man, out at the elbows and looking as though he had spent the night in the park, stopped a gentleman on the sidewalk and said:

"My friend, you haven't seen a family consist of a woman and four small children—two boys and two girls, the girls look like me and the boys like their mother—go riding by here today in a two story frame house painted yellow?"

"Excuse me, my friend. I'm in a hurry."

The wayfarer passed on, leaving the seedy man standing looking after him. A long time he felt very much hurt. Leaning up against a tree box, he waited for another person to question.

A lady came along and the man, pulling the rim of his hat, accosted her. "Beg your pardon, ma'am. Have you seen anything of a poor woman with four children enjoying themselves on an afternoon ride in a yellow house on wheels down this here street?"

The lady looked sorrowfully at the man, took out her pocketbook, picked out a silver coin to the value of 10 cents, gave it to him and walked on. He looked at the retreating lady, then at the coin in his hand, and did not seem to understand.

The next person to whom he applied was a benevolent looking woman with nutmeg chop whiskers and spectacles.

"I'm lookin'," said the seedy man. "For a family?" and stopped short.

"Well, my good man, tell me about what family you're looking for."

"I've told that to two persons already, and they don't seem to know what I'm talking about. I don't want to just call 'em a family to you, so I wouldn't mix you up, and say nothing about the rest of it."

"But how can I help you to become reunited to this family without your telling me more about them?"

"Well, if you're sure you'll understand what I'm telling you, let me ride by here about this time in a yellow house enjoyin' themselves."

"In a yellow house?"

"Yes, my good man, said the other after contemplating him thoughtfully for some time, "tell me where you live. I'm going to take you home."

"My residence is anywhere from 74 Union street to no number at all at present, Holkins street."

"Your Holkins?" sighed the benevolent man.

"I told you you wouldn't understand me. None of the others did. What's the matter with you? You don't know it? They only think I'm gone daff."

He looked very much troubled. Tugging out his handkerchief, he dabbed his nose nervously.

"Come with me," said the benevolent man coaxingly.

"I don't want to go anywhere with him. I don't want to catch my wife and children as they go by and enjoy the rest of the ride with 'em."

"What I can take you where you'll learn all about it. Come."

"Where you go to take me?"

"Oh, I'll take you where you'll be cared for."

"I don't want to be cared for. I want to know whether my family has gone past. There's a puff of smoke blowin' around the corner now. I don't want to see 'em there."

"I see. They're coming in an automobile. You confused it with a yellow house."

"I didn't do so much thing. The smoke I'm talkin' about comes out of the chimney."

The gentleman assumed an authoritative tone. "Now, my man, either walk with me to a police station or you'll call a policeman and have your own car towed away. You're off your head. I don't know whether you are a dangerous lunatic or not, but you need to be shut up, if not for the public good, for your own."

"I knowed it," said the man abruptly. "I knowed if I told you the full thing I'd get myself into trouble."

"Will you come?"

"Who are you anyways?"

"I'm the president of the Society of General Charities. Now you know that I mean you no harm. I want to help you."

"But I don't need no help. There's another puff of smoke. I reckon that's your car. Turn the corner pretty soon. Will you wait a few minutes? If they don't come along just as I said they would I'll go with you."

"Instead of waiting I'll go with you. If you are satisfied the smoke you see comes from another cause than what you suppose, perhaps you will go with me."

"Reckon I'll risk it."

They walked down the street to the corner where he saw the smoke and, turning into it, saw a windmill pulled around by a horse. Ropes led from it to a two story yellow house about 100 feet away, which was being moved in the middle of the street.

"There she are!" exclaimed the seedy man. "Come on. I'll show you the family."

The gentleman hesitated. Then, with an expression of discontentment, he was about to go on his way when he changed his mind and followed the other. Sitting in a window darning stockings was a woman, while children were running about.

"Hello, Ted!" said the seedy man.

"Hello, John!" said the woman.

The benevolent gentleman took a bill out of his pocket, handed it to the mover and walked away.

OF INTEREST TO FARMERS.

DR. PRIDGE TELLS OF DAIRY INSPECTION

Paper Read Before Farmers' Institute at Bustleton—Why Cleanliness and Care in Handling Milk Are Important—Most Farmers Produce Good Milk, Only Ten Per Cent Bad.

At the present time dairy inspection is being much discussed and studied by the farmer, many looking on this inspection as leading to the point of losing control of the management of his farm or occupation and delegating this control to parties not interested in his financial welfare. But in civilized communities the welfare of all is to be taken into consideration, so that in dealing with men dispensing poisons, such as druggists, we have laws governing their sales—not because druggists are considered dishonest, but to safeguard and protect the public and to control the sale of articles that are considered by the citizens of the State to be injurious or leading to depraved appetites. Many people may say that they should be allowed to purchase anything they choose to pay for, yet our laws demand that certain requirements be lived up to and impose certain restrictions. These are taken up in every and all our occupations and when we find a law enacted that brings a hardship greater than the benefits derived, then, usually, the law is repealed.

This is what brings us together to-day—to study the conditions which exist or are likely to exist which might be detrimental to our occupations. We will have to study more than one phase of the question before arriving at a well balanced conclusion. I hear some say that dairy inspection is driving the dairy farmer out or is likely to drive him out of this branch of agriculture. This inspection has been in force in several of our States for a long while and farmers of these States are quoted by some as saying that this inspection is "killing the dairy business" and that there are not nearly as many cows in these States as formerly. In answering this statement we will have to study this problem further back than inspection and see what conditions existed before the inspection was commenced.

We are too apt to jump at conclusions. Climatic conditions often change farming, and we will note that these climatic conditions are oftentimes the same for a number of years, to be followed by reverse conditions for a number of years. These conditions, I repeat, will change our mode of farming to a condition opposite to the manner we farmed in the past. A few years ago we had warm or early springs, followed by warm, wet summers, with a great production of forage. The potatoes would rot or be so "soggy" that many gave up the raising of potatoes as unprofitable. These climatic conditions existed for several years and farmers found that dairying was more profitable, as they had a large amount of forage and grain, the price was low and the demand still lower. Then large herds were raised, the production of beef and milk or butter was the chief industry and the inspections of the dairy by State inspectors, as in Massachusetts and New York did not deter the farmers from dairying.

Now climatic conditions have changed and for a number of years we have had cold springs, followed by dry summers, with the price of labor at a prohibitory point and the price of feed out of all proportion with the price of dairy products. When we found we could get more for our hay and grain than we could get from the sales of the dairy, then the sale of cows for beef was begun for the same conditions. This has reduced the number of dairy cows more than any laws man could enact. It is purely a question of economics.

Now what is dairy inspection? What does it mean? For some time in the past many small towns have had Boards of Health who supervised the sanitation of those towns, and one of the conditions coming under their supervision was the inspection of and demand of certain rules to be followed in the production of milk. As milk is one of the best culture media for germs, and is very liable to be contaminated with filth, these Boards of Health demanded clean milkers and clean cows, with healthy surroundings. This made such a change in bettering the quality of the milk and lowering the death rate that other communities took notice, until finally our large cities began to demand more supervision of the dairies supplying them with milk and now our Commonwealth has commenced a State wide examination.

Are we, as farmers and producers interested in this question? Are we, as citizens interested in this question? Is there any difference in these interests? The death occurred in the advance bulletin issued recently by the Census Bureau did not include all the deaths that occur in the United States but only those returned from what is known as the "death registration area." This embraces certain States having effective registration laws, like those in Pennsylvania, and certain cities in nonregistration states in which the statistics are collected under local ordinances. From this area the Census Bureau received transcripts of 800,000 deaths in 1910, of which number 154,373, or 19.2 per cent were infants under one year of age. The number of deaths during the second year of life, 33,950, or 4.1 per cent was only about one-fifth as the number during the first year, although it exceeded the number shown for any five year period between the ages of 5 and 35. It is evident that the mortality during the first two years of life, and especially during the first year, is a very important factor of the general death rate, and that the ascertainment of the proportion of deaths during the first or second year of life may be of great value in devising practical sanitary measures; even though such a comparison does not measure precisely the true infantile mortality.

What is this mortality of infant life due to? Many may say "due to hot weather," as many die during these heated spells, but sanitarians know that hot weather is only the means to an end, and that the milk is much more difficult to handle and deliver to the consumer in a wholesome condition during these excessively hot spells. Consequently the child will be compelled to drink milk that will not be digested and soon end in cholera infantum.

Why should a physician have to tell a mother to stop giving milk to the child and give it condensed milk or other foods that he knows to be free from irritating germs? I say, why should such conditions exist when they can be so easily controlled. This has brought about the dairy inspection. Milk being a most delicate food product, so easily contaminated, and where ignorantly handled becomes a source of danger to those of weak digestive powers, and as pure, clean, wholesome milk is the food best suited for those requiring concentrated nourishment, there is demanded certain supervision in its production, transportation and handling.

Farmers are asking, where is the producer to be benefited by such inspection? At the inspection last May it was found that 75 per cent of our farmers produced good, wholesome milk—milk that any of us would drink without hesitation. 15 per cent of the dairies inspected were rated "fair." This class, one would stop and question whether he would like to drink the milk, and the inspectors engaged in the work of inspecting such dairies saw just enough to lead him to think he could get along without using milk for the present, at least. Then 10 per cent of the dairies were rated bad. These dairies were dirty, the cows were dirty and everything around the place would lead one to believe milk could not be produced under such conditions that would be fit to be used for human consumption.

This bad milk, representing the output of only 10 per cent of the total number of dairies inspected, is mixed with the good and fair milk produced on the remaining 90 per cent and placed in cans or bottles and shipped to the city to be delivered to the consumers, and no distinction made as to quality or wholesomeness at all. We can readily see therefore how the milk from this comparatively small percentage of dairies can and does contaminate the milk which it is mixed and the germs and filth contained in it are distributed broadcast among the unsuspecting consumers, probably causing or at least helping along in many cases the spread of disease.

Now farmers, are you interested in this question? Do you wish to compete with such producers of unclean milk? You hear our lecturers tell us to learn how to produce our crops at a less cost, but this is one of the crops where lessening the cost in its production will destroy our business. We all know it costs more to be clean than to be moderately clean, and much more than to make absolutely no effort at cleanliness. Some farmers produce milk only as a side issue. They have a certain amount of roughage that is not salable and see where a few cows can be made profitable under such conditions, but the owner of such a dairy does not put the energy and skill in this branch of his occupation that he does into his "money" crop, consequently such milk is very likely to be produced in a poor manner and often times really dangerous to the infant.

What can we do to better conditions in this line? The State has a score card which many of you have seen. This card contains specifications covering the ideal conditions that should exist in order that milk may be produced and handled in as nearly perfect a manner as we are at the present time able to do.

1. It is advisable to have only cows kept in the stable used for dairy purposes. Hogs, especially are bad.

POLICE NEWS.

Harry Coffman, of New York City, was arrested in Philadelphia on Thursday and turned over to Sergeant Gately, of the Cheltenham police. The charge against him was abduction, assault and felonious use of force. At the hearing before Squire Haines, on Friday, it was learned that Coffman, who had a 14-year-old son, was in the Jewish Industrial Home, at Cheltenham village, had gone there in November, threatened the caretaker and entered the premises, taking his daughter to a waiting automobile and fled to New York. The girl had been placed in the home by the Philadelphia Juvenile court. It was not until Coffman appeared at the Foster Home in Germantown, where another of his daughters is an inmate, that he was captured. Squire Haines held the prisoner under $100 bail for his appearance at court.

Two vagrants were arrested on Tuesday and after being held over night were discharged, with a warning to keep out of the township.

Upon the sister's refusal, she created the disturbance, even attacking the nurse, who held one of the Fowler babies. At the hearing before Squire Comly, it was thought that prisoner was demented and after paying the costs of $2.50 was discharged.

The members of the Abington fire company are doing as to the various types of automobile fire engines. The one that they would like to get is of the very latest pattern, which not only protects the automobile to the fire but the same motor is used in pumping water. This style of fire fighting apparatus is the most improved and up-to-date but would cost in the neighborhood of $9000. It would be of great use to every section of the township as it would carry the chemical features of the ordinary automobile engine and the pumping system that would allow those situated off of the lines of the water makes a fire of protection as the pump could be used to draw the water from lakes, creeks or wells and throw three streams at one time. The motor is of more than 100 horse-power and of great capacity. As the money for the apparatus is to be raised by subscription it is not known how freely the people will assist the company in this enterprise.
